About This Game

INFRA puts you into the boots of an ordinary structural analyst – nothing more than a desk jockey assigned to survey some routine structural damage. Quickly though, your mission turns from a mundane trek to a fight for survival, all caused by deep-rooted schemes of the past. Your tools are simple: the camera around your neck and the wits to navigate a virtual labyrinth of debris. How you tell your story is your choice, will you have the commitment to finish your duty, or will you ignore all else but the preservation of your own life?

INFRA is what we like to call a gun-free puzzle adventure. Instead of large explosions and powerful guns, you will rely on your cunning to survive puzzles in an incredibly detailed world. As you travel through the infrastructure of a city you will find that your actions and thorough observations ultimately determine if others will survive. A society obsessed with upgradation has brought a disaster upon itself and it is your job to help restore it.

It is brilliant!. Gets frustrating around chapter 3, but really bad beginning with chapter 4.

If you enjoying running around a huge hyper-detailed open environment looking for the one thing you need to interact with, this is the game for you.

also the voice acting and writing are atrocious. I have a strange love for this game.

Though It might have a slow boil, it has reasons for it..

This game sucked me in and I wanted to see the end... which I did.

pro's :

- environmental horror : the level is out to get you sometimes, but when?
- self aware : this game is aware of its bs, and the protagonist is to. It comments on itself right when you want to.
- realistic levels : it feels like a world that could exist. Every site could work, if it was'nt broken.
- tricky puzzles : okay, some are hell-ish, but most are highly doable if you keep thinking (some hate you though).
- length : this game was longer then I expected, and it felt like a real journey.
- OCD paradise : this game has stuff hidden EVERYWHERE... and its all easy to miss.
- action-reaction : your actions effect the world arround you, even in later levels. hint: look for e-mails.
- trains : mini-trains are fun. This game has them ... allot :D
- originality : I cant think of another game that does this. (those "simulator" games dont count).
- bosses : funny enough, they are in here. Only not in the common way.

cons :

- open levels : though far and few between, I got lost in them. and the: where-do-I-go? is just not fun.
- hitbox : sometimes it feels like luck when climbing in-to/on-to works, getting stuck on something feels : aaaARGHhh.
- batteries : hunt for batteries, cause my equipment is crap.
- water hazard : water is a recurring hazard and you drown in 10 cm of it, sometimes not.. wait WHAT?
- water level traversion : combined with the awefull hit detection: F the boat - F the raft.
- small non-puzzels : "wait, that was interactable?" .. yes, that... and that got me stuck for hours.
- creepy people : when you meet others, get a crucifix ready. .. als stilted animation .. to add to the creep factor.
- keys : small @#$$ that are hard to miss, and (some times) even harder to figure out where they go neutrals :

- texture quality : realy dont care about this if its all the same quality... most of the time.
- voice acting : not be the greatest, but it got charming after a while. Because the quality of it was consistant.
- crashing : only ones it has crashed on me...so.. yeah.. that was it.
- created with assets : If you cant model it yourself, buy it. Just dont look to much into this, you'll start twitching.
- dying : sometimes its the game hating me, mostly its me going: "can I jump of this?" , "can I step on this bomb?"
- detours : even the protagonist start to get annoyed at the game lengthening: stuff-breaks-find-detour-bs.

Overall I had a great time with it.

If I can find the time, Im going to see if I can 100% it.
